Alexander Pope, 1688-1744

« les paysages sont nos seuls monuments »

Edouard Glissant 1928-2011

« Me
pensant,
c'est
toujours
en terme
de terre,
ou de mer,
ou de
végétal
que je me
dessine »
